English Officers in the Crimea.

Our readers will recollect some stinging paragraphs, which we quoted a few weeks ago from the London Times, denouncing the Administration for the wretched condition of affairs in the camp at Balaklava. In accordance with a recent move in parliament by W. Roebuck, a Committee of Inquiry has been sitting in London for the investigation of the whole matter of the conduct of the war before which some most extraordinary disclosures have been made. fully confirming the worst charges of the Times .-Never, perhaps, has an army been sent forth to meet an enemy commanded by officers so utterly imbecile, the biggest dollar our cotton will fetch, which is profligate, and corrupt. We do not wonder that the liveliest indignation has been excited in the minds of the English people against the late Ministry, and we shall be surprised if the matter does not terminate in the impeachment of Lord Ragian and other agents of the government of less rank. Among other witnesses examined by the Committee was Gen. De-Lacy Evans, who thus testified to the manner in which hostilities were begun : "The war was commenced as if it were a matter of no moment The expedition, as it landed at Varna. was not really prepared for war. It was thought that there would be no explosion of gunpo der, and that there would be no necessity for magazines at made to put the army in condition to move."

There can be no question about the vacillating policy of the Cabinet at home, nor is it to be wondered at that irresolution at head-quarters should have a demoralizing effect upon every branch of the service abroad. Accordingly we begin to see reckless attention and deplorable incapacity in all de-Gen. Sir De Lacy Evans said : "The commissarial

A certain Admiral Boxer, who had charge of the harbour, was proved to be an insolent, bad tempered man, proverbial for drunkenness, and to have filled results to the army. But the testimony of the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE was far the most astounding and incredible of all. He stated that it was late in the month of November before Lord Raglan had actually made up his mind to winter in the Crimea, when his ordship sent off to Constantinople to purchase clothing for the soldiers, which was not to be had there at all. And Lord Cardigan, after fully corroborating all that the Duke had said, declared that in the light brigade alone, so dreadful was the suffering BOUNTY FOR SEAMEN .- The pressing want of sea- of the horses for want of forage, that four hundred ces of those whose terms of enlistment have expired, military fame of England is somewhat lowered by has induced the Secretary of the Navy, with the disclosures like these.
